Market Commentary

The S&P 500 Index advanced by 6.2% month-over-month (M/M) in May, supported by the US and China announcing a temporary trade truce aimed at de-escalating trade tensions, with both countries agreeing to reduce tariffs for a 90-day period to facilitate further negotiations. Market performance was also supported by a rebound in consumer confidence and a May headline CPI print that came in at 2.3% year-over-year, the lowest since February 2021, while the core CPI reading remained steady at 2.8% year-over-year. OPEC+ announced the third consecutive monthly production hike of 411,000 barrels per day, effective in July. Despite rising production capacity against a backdrop of weakening global demand, Brent oil price increased by 1.2%

M/M in May due to geopolitical tensions in Ukraine and the Middle East.

Saudi Tadawul was down 5.8% MoM, driven by a broad-based selloff reflecting investors' concerns over the impact of lower oil prices on the Saudi economy. While Saudi Arabia plans to maintain its current level of government spending amid an increasing budget deficit, the Ministry of Finance is reviewing spending priorities to better align expenditures with its strategic objectives of supporting the non-oil economy, diversifying economic activity away from oil, and managing its debt level and costs prudently. IPO activity in Saudi Arabia remains healthy despite lower oil prices; the flynas IPO attracted US$109 billion in orders, with several companies across various sectors securing regulatory approvals to go public. Despite the sell-off, QFIs remained net buyers worth SAR2.6 billion during the month.

Despite the near-term uncertainty surrounding regional geopolitics, tariffs and economic slowdown and the likely impact on oil prices and Saudi fiscal spending, we remain constructive over the medium outlook for the Saudi market. As a result, our strategy is geared towards taking advantage of severe dislocations in the market and selectively investing in companies where fundamentals remain intact and anchored due to the ongoing market reforms and time bound project execution.
